

ABSTRACT

An information system with mechanisms for directing incoming client requests to individual
5 access subsystems based on client-side information associated with the client requests. The client-side information enables a client to direct the assignment of the client requests in a manner that enhances overall response time in the information system while 10 minimizing loss of valuable cached information caused by power reduction in the information system.